What does Fairtrade mean?

Fairtrade means 'trade' that is 'fair'.

Trade is when people and countries sell things to each other. Farmers sell the crops they grow.

Trade isn't always fair. Big companies and rich countries buy a lot of crops from poor countries. They don't always pay a good price.

Fairtrade buyers want to make things better. They agree to pay farmers a fair price for their crops.

How does Fairtrade work?

Fairtrade farmers know they will get a good price. They can make plans for their farms, spending money to make them better and safer. The farmers must also agree to treat their workers well.

Fairtrade buyers pay extra money, called a 'premium'. The farmers might use this premium to build a school or a health centre in their village.

Look out for the Fairtrade Mark!

How do we know if things are Fairtrade?

Fairtrade products are sold in the shops. If something is Fairtrade, it will have the Fairtrade Mark on it. Can you find the Mark on anything in your house?

Fairtrade goods are sometimes more expensive. But they're also very tasty!

What kind of things are Fairtrade?

Bananas are the most popular Fairtrade fruit. There's also Fairtrade:

- coffee
- tea
- chocolate
- sugar
- flowers
- gold
- cotton (to make clothes)

Fairtrade bananas are very popular

In total, there are more than 4,500 Fairtrade products!

Where do Fairtrade products come from?

Fairtrade products come from countries all over the world.

Bananas and cocoa are grown in tropical countries. Fairtrade flowers come from Kenya, in Africa. Mines in South America produce glittering Fairtrade gold.

Wherever they are in the world, Fairtrade farmers promise to look after their environment (the world around them). The environment matters to all of us.

What can I do to help?

Have you ever said: 'It's not fair'? Well – now you can make a change!

When you shop, look out for the Fairtrade Mark. Could you buy some Fairtrade fruit or chocolate? What about your school lunches? Ask if your school uses Fairtrade ingredients.

Why not hold a Fairtrade coffee morning!

If you're good at baking, you could hold a Fairtrade coffee morning. Make Fairtrade coffee and tea (don't forget Fairtrade sugar)! Bake a yummy chocolate cake using Fairtrade cocoa.

Fair – and delicious!
